

Anton Bodor & Daniel Trilli

With a driving vision to expand wire wrapping techniques, style and flow Anton Bodor has been harvesting his ideas since the new millennium. A self taught wire artist who has pushed the complexity and detail of wire work jewelry into a new era. Using .999 fine Silver, and only wire cutters and pliers Anton transforms 20 feet of 30 gauge wire and various sized base wires into fine handcrafted jewelry. After spending much time working with fine gems and minerals Anton wanted to expand his art form and combine glass with his wire work. The search began to find a glass blower that shared similar creative energy and inspiration and with the willingness to take on an apprentice. After several years of disappointment in finding his ideal instructor, Anton decided that a move out of his native Las Vegas (NV) was necessary. After consideration Anton felt that the Land of Enchantment was going to provide his artistic inspiration and future. Within the first week of arriving in Southwest New Mexico his vision proved to be correct. Attending a local Arts and Craft show he became acquainted with Daniel Trilli, a local glassblower. Their creative similarities and goals were apparent from the get-go. Daniel was first introduced to glass blowing by a friend Sam Yemeni. He saw him take a solid piece of glass, turn it into a liquid form over a flame and stretch it out.

Fascinated with the drastic physical change and creative possibilities he knew at this moment that he wanted to become a glassblower. He received his apprenticeship from Sam, learning traditional pipe and marble making. Looking to expand his glass knowledge Daniel sought out other glassblowers and became acquainted with Eli Copland. Studying under Eli he received a greater knowledge of borosilicate glass, learning advanced techniques and about the scientific aspects of glass blowing. Nearing two years now of blowing glass, Daniel has become a true student to the art and science of lampworking. His relentless pursuit in achieving the most technical and high quality product possible has paved the way for establishing himself as a serious glassblower. Today Anton and Daniel have become apprentices of each others art form, constantly pushing each other to new levels of creativity and design. Their work can be found in Juliennes and Davenport Jewelry in Las Cruces (NM), surrounding area Art and Crafts shows, eBay (seller docwattson), and coming soon at www.artusmart.com.
